Vantage Reporting changes name to Vantage Software; hires David Sayles as Director of Sales and Client Service to support the company's continued growth

BOSTON, MA – October 28, 2007 – Vantage Software, the only vendor that provides private investment firms with customizable software designed to extend their existing systems, today announced it has changed its name to Vantage Software, reflecting the company's strategic focus to delivering products that can be easily implemented out-of-the-box, with or without customization.

“Since founding Vantage, we have worked with world-class clients to continually develop a solid set of core products that deliver the robust functionality of comparable packaged solutions,” said Vantage Software CEO Greg Woolf. “By virtue of our innovative software design, we also give clients the option of customizing our solutions to meet their unique operational requirements.”

Vantage's four core software products – Vantage Deal Manager™, Vantage Performance™, Vantage Funds-of-Funds™ and Vantage Investor™ – encompass the private investment lifecycle. Vantage's industry-first Precision Tailored Components™ allow for integration with existing third-party and/or proprietary solutions, allowing clients to rapidly tailor functionality to meet their specific needs.

To support Vantage's continued global growth, David Sayles has also joined Vantage as director of sales and client service. Sayles will be responsible for the development and implementation of sales, account management and business development efforts. Sayles has more than 18 years of experience developing, bringing to market and managing financial technology solutions, particularly for the private investment industry. He is a frequent speaker at conferences and industry events.

Prior to Vantage, as director of sales and business development, Sayles helped Pyxis Mobile become a market leader in wireless financial applications, serving 20 of the world's top 40 investment managers. Sayles was a founding member of Thomson Financial's First Call BondCall, a pioneering electronic delivery system for sell-side fixed-income research to institutional money managers. Before that, he managed Standard & Poor's portfolio management MaPS software division, which supported $115B in AUM and experienced 300 percent growth in four years under his leadership.

“David brings a wealth of experience in the financial and technology industries, including valuable insight into the unique operational environments of private investment firms,” Woolf added. “Given the company's continued global growth, we are pleased to have such a seasoned sales and client service veteran help us continue to expand our market position and quality of service to our clients.”
